

24 September 2009

Landlords think positive about property prices

Apparently landlords are feeling more confident about the direction that property values are heading. (Well I'm glad you lot are, because I'm feeling rather shaky.)

A survey from the Young Group, reports that the majority of UK residential landlords and buy-to-let investors think property prices will be higher in 12 months time, or at worst, stay static.

Investors seem most confident about London prices, with 77 percent predicting an increase in property prices in the next 12 months.

I'm all for positive thinking!

